More thoughts on hope...

I recently met with a newly indoctrinated mom. Her precious 19-year-old son died suddenly of what might have been a congenital heart problem only three months before. Clearly still in shock, trying desperately to understand what she's supposed to do now, we had a leisurely lunch and talked about our kids. We cried, we laughed, we reminisced as if we had known each other for years. We looked at pictures and gave a face to this unimaginable grief.

As always, talking with a Mom so new to this experience, brought it all back for me. All the pain I was so afraid of forgetting, the love and longing I feared to move away from – it was all there, as palpable as it was so many years ago. It really is never very far away. It's always just beneath the skin ready to erupt at the slightest suggestion. She was sorry she was bringing it all back. She tried to apologize. I recognized her feelings. I remember feeling badly for making other people feel badly when I had to tell them Peter had died. I went to some lengths to avoid people so I didn't have to make them feel badly. How ridiculous that seems now.

So confused, so disbelieving, in such seemingly mortal pain, so wanting to die, she asked me a question her husband suggested she ask me when we met. His question: what did they have to hope for? Now, I've been living and writing about this life for many years. People tell me that no matter how dark my thoughts are, I always seem to end on a hopeful note. I've thought about that and in truth, it is a tough question. After all, I've always found the biggest surprise about this experience is that we don't die from it. I still think it is amazing that we don't and considering the pain we must slog through for a lifetime, we probably

Progress in Grief: Five Years Out

I still don't understand how this is my life.

I've had five years to adapt to what some would term my "new normal" since Evelyn, our eighteen-year-old daughter, died suddenly in her sleep, though there's nothing normal about it. And while I have definitely made peace and progress with elements of this journey I never asked to go on, the truth is, I still don't know how I got here. I'm not sure that horrible morning in August that ruptured our world will ever make sense, that I'll ever have an answer to what happened or how, that this new reality will ever truly sink in. But I am expected to carry on. Despite the enormous uncertainty, the trail of questions, the agonizing longing. And that's precisely what I'm doing. Carrying on. Putting one foot in front of the other down a path I can't reason with but must accept. Every. Single. Day.

I don't really have words for how it feels to wake up every day in a world you don't recognize. I know, five years later, where I am. I just don't know where that is. I think that's one of the hardest aspects of child loss. It's so fucking inconceivable that your mind can't fully process it. Reality ceases to be solid. It becomes this amorphous thing, like jello, forever bending out of shape, refusing to adhere to the rules. Other losses, in my experience, just aren't like that. They're hard and they're sad and they're unfortunate. But they fit into the world. They don't break your brain.

Despite the surrealness of this life, I've learned to love aspects of it again. It has taken time, of course, to get there. To not drown in guilt every time I found a shred of pleasure. To allow myself an ounce of joy. To teach myself how to hold gratitude. To believe I deserve beauty. I don't get these right all the time. The guilt still surfaces. The rage. The horror. That's to be expected. But I think what is striking is that despite how decimated Ev's loss left me, how full of pain and betrayal—for I believed the whole world betrayed me in that moment—whatever was left behind has grown.

THE COMPASSIONATE FRIENDS MEETINGS are now monthly - always the third Tuesday of the month
WE MEET USING ZOOM AT 7:00pm—sign on at 6:45pm
 As soon as possible, we hope to return in person to the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church
 55th Street and Fifth Ave (enter at 7 West 55th St.)

The Compassionate Friends is a mutual assistance self-help organization offering friendship and understanding to bereaved parents, grandparents and siblings. We are a group seeking support in our grief or are able to give it. Among us your religion, your race, your politics, your job or social standing are not important. We care about your grief—the tragedy that each of us have shared—and how we can grow through it, not back to the person we were, but to the person we can become.

More thoughts on hope... (con't from page 1)

should. But since we don't and I still haven't after all this time, I have given some thought to what I think hope is now.

I guess I hope for the smaller things in life. Actually, the smallest things in life. Since I cannot hope for the big things (dancing at my son's wedding, grandchildren...peace in the world) I hope for achievable things:

- a sunny day
- a painless hour
- thinking of Peter with a smile
- enjoying a laugh with friends
- watching my garden grow
- reading a good book
- having a "good" day

So when I am reminded by my friends that no matter how dark, bleak or despairing my writing, I always seem to end on a mildly hopeful note, it's not intentional. But it is natural. I think now that I am fortunate, in a way, that throughout my life, my glass has always been half full. That instinct has served me well during these very dark years. I've always been fairly certain I will eventually see some light at the end of the proverbial tunnel. Even while I struggle with the absolute knowledge that I won't see Peter again in this world, I've wrapped myself around the possibility that I will see him in the next.

Today, I can honestly say I'm not sorry I didn't die. I've managed in twelve years to keep Peter in this world a bit longer than if I had joined him. I see how quickly life rushes by. No need to push it. Peter is so present in my life, I wonder now how intensely together we would have been had life been a bigger presence than death. Weird thoughts. Hope? I hope my belief that we'll all be together again someday is true. I hope that someone takes some comfort in finding that they aren't crazy when they read what I write and recognize they have some of the same thoughts and feelings. I hope that Peter comes to me in another dream someday soon.

I continue to grieve for my lost child and my lost life. But I recognize now that I am not unique. My family has been dealt a lousy hand but we can't simply leave the game. We must play out this hand and honor each other as best we can. I'm a very different person today than I was then – not better – just different. And finally, I hope that everything I've learned about survival and everything I do to share that knowledge, will serve as a fitting tribute to my son – a young man whose abbreviated life here on earth may have served some purpose beyond my understanding.

It's been a hot summer. Now we must gather our strength for the seasons ahead. School's almost back in session - can Halloween and the holidays be far behind? Life goes on my dear, dear friends. Hope for the best.

Marie Levine

"When we are struggling through the night, falling prey to the beasts of guilt and regret, drowning in a river of tears, finally succumbing to exhaustion, we cannot be expected to believe in the beauty of the coming dawn. Somewhere in our past, we knew morning to be night's faithful follower, but for now, that understanding will have to force its way through the menacing darkness and back to us again.

~ Molly Fumia, "Safe Passage"

Progress in Grief: 5 Years Out (con't from page 1)

And in that growth was space. Enough space to hold love beside the sorrow, and joy beside the grief, and desire beside the devastation.

Sometimes, that other life we lived and loved feels very far away. And the distance is excruciating, but also functional. As the view behind me grows smaller, I find I must keep my eyes on the step ahead, stop craning to stare over my shoulder at what was and cannot be again. Other times, that life is a breath at my back, so fresh and present that I think if I just knew how I could reach through time and touch it, maybe pull it toward me, taste it again. You might expect that nearness would bring comfort, but it usually brings the opposite—more pain, more confusion, more wondering and wishing and what-if-ing.

I've asked myself more than once what I would tell another parent just finding themselves on this brutal journey. What could I offer that might give them something to cling to, to believe in when the days drag long and weary and unbearably hard? What can I possibly say in the wake of their agonizing loss? But I find it easier to determine what I won't say.

If you're reading this and you're a month, or a year, or a couple of years down this road, stumbling in the dark, missing your child, I won't tell you it gets easier. I won't tell you you'll get stronger. I won't tell you it hurts less, or that a day will come when you don't pine for them and miss their smile, their smell, the sound of their voice. But I will tell you that like anything else in this universe, it changes. It evolves with you. It moves and morphs and rolls through its own trajectory like a comet streaking through the atmosphere. At times, you'll see grace and awe in the comet's sparkling tail. At others, it will burn like all nine levels of hell at once. You will love the comet. And you will hate the comet. But the comet will be with you forever now. Take what you can from that wholly useless metaphor because nothing accurately describes the experience you're living in.

People love a transformation story. And they'll no doubt read this and think I've overcome some terrible obstacle and now my story is complete. But that's not what it's like at all. Evelyn's death has not left me, not even for a moment. It grieves me every step of the way. All of the difficult but natural things I felt that day and every day since are still right here with me. They don't disappear. But my capacity to carry them and still have room for other things has continued to shift and change. I feel all the bad, terrible things about her death still. But I feel so many good, beautiful things now too. In the early days of the After, that just wasn't possible. But the human heart is a strange and wonderful beast, luminous and resilient if given the chance to be. If I deny it nothing, it obliges me in kind.

In other words, by allowing the painful feelings when necessary, I have allowed the pleasant ones right alongside them. Whatever progress I've made hasn't come from repressing my grief, but embracing it.

I often think that is exactly how Ev would want it.

Reading other bereaved people's stories help us. Take advantage of these resources. Discovering how much of what we feel is being experienced by fellow travelers, helps us understand the process and restores hope.

...to our new members

Attending your first meeting is the hardest thing to do. But you have nothing to lose and everything to gain. Try not to judge your first meeting as to whether or not TCF will work for you. Often, it is the second, third or fourth meeting where you will find just the right person or the right words said that will help you along in your grief.

...to our long standing members

We need your encouragement and continued support. You are what ties our group together. Sadly, each meeting brings new parents. THINK BACK... what would it have been like for you if there had not been any "oldtimers" to welcome you and share your grief and encourage you and tell you that in time, the pain will soften...with time, there is hope.

The Compassionate Friends Credo

*We need not walk alone.
We are The Compassionate Friends.
We reach out to each other with love, with understanding,
and with hope.*

*Our children have died at all ages and from many different causes, but our love for our children unites us.
Your pain becomes my pain just as your hope becomes my hope.*

*We come together from all walks of life, from many different circumstances.
We are a unique family because we represent many races and creeds.
We are young and we are old.*

*Some of us are far along in our grief, but others still feel a grief so fresh, and so intensely painful that we feel helpless and see no hope.
Some of us have found our faith to be a source of strength;
some of us are struggling to find answers.
Some of us are angry, filled with guilt or deep depression;
others radiate an inner peace.*

It is pain we will share just as we share the love for our children.

*We are all seeking and struggling to build a future for ourselves, but we are committed to building a future together as we reach out to each other in love, and share the pain as well as the joy, share the anger as well as the peace,
share the faith as well as the doubts,
and help each other to grieve, as well as to grow.*

Online Support from the National Compassionate Friends Website

Live Chats

The Compassionate Friends offers "virtual chapters" through an Online Support Community (live chats). This program was established to encourage connecting and sharing among parents, grandparents, and siblings (over the age of 18) grieving the death of a child. The rooms supply support, encouragement, and friendship. The friendly atmosphere encourages conversation among friends; friends who understand the emotions you're experiencing. There are general bereavement sessions as well as more specific sessions.

Click HERE for more information and a list and schedule of Live Chats.

Private Facebook Groups

The Compassionate Friends offers a variety of Private Facebook Groups. These pages cover a wide range of topics and are moderated by bereaved parents, siblings, or grandparents. They may accessed only after a request to join is approved by a moderator.

I LOST MY CHILD TODAY

I lost my child today
People came to weep and cry,
As I just sat and stared, dry-eyed.
They struggled to find words to say
To try and make the pain go away.
I walked the floor in disbelief,
I lost my child today.

I lost my child last month.
Most of the people went away.
Some still call and some still stay.
I wait to wake up from this dream,
This can't be real, I want to scream.
Yet everything is locked inside.
God help me, I want to die.
I lost my child last month.

I lost my child last year.
Now, people who had come, have gone.
I sit and struggle all day long
To bear the pain so deep inside.
And now my friends just question, why?
Why does this mother not move on?
Just sits and sings the same old song.
Good heavens, it has been so long.
I lost my child last year.

Time has not moved on for me.
The numbness, it has disappeared.
My eyes have now cried many tears.
I see the look upon your face.
'you must move on and leave this place.'
Yet I am trapped right here in time.
The song's the same as is the rhyme.
I lost my child ...today...

THE BEAUTY PLACES

By Edgar A. Guest

Here she walked and romped about here beneath this apple tree where all the grass is tramped out the swing she loved so used to be.

This path is but a path to you,
because my child you never knew.
'Twas here she used to stoop to smell
the first bright daffodil of Spring.

'Twas here she often tripped and fell and here she heard the robins sing.
You'd call this but a common place,
but you have never seen her face.

And it was here we used to meet.
How beautiful a spot is this.
To which she gayly raced to greet her Daddy with his evening kiss!

You see here nothing grand or fine.
But oh, what memories are mine!
The people pass from day to day,
and never turn their head to see

The many charms along the way that mean so very much to me.
For all things here are speaking of the babe that once was mine to love.

Gifts of Love

A Love Gift is a donation given in memory of a child who has died, or sometimes a memorial to a relative or friend. It can be in honor of a happy event that you would like to acknowledge, or simply a gift from someone who wants to help in the work of our chapter.

All TCF chapters are totally dependent on funds from our families. We DO NOT receive funds from our National Office. Everything we need to operate our local chapters is paid directly from our local resources and our local family contributions. Thank you to all who can contribute and support this chapter. Please see 'Making a Contribution' below:

Passing the Basket – During normal times, we raise needed funds at each meeting by passing a basket for voluntary contributions. In this time without in person meetings, the Manhattan Chapter is going without the resources we usually get from the basket passed during our meetings. We are so glad to be able to hold the online meetings, and if you are able to, once a month or whenever you can, please help and make a 'Basket' contribution to help our organization.

Siblings

Do Not Discount Sibling Grief

I have come to think of sibling grief as “discount grief”. Why? Because siblings appear to be an emotional bargain in most people’s eyes. People worry so much about the bereaved parents that they invest very little attention on the grieving sibling.

My personal “favorite” comforting line said to siblings is “you be sure to take care of your parents.” I wanted to know who was supposed to take care of me – I know I couldn’t.

The grief of a sibling may differ from that of a parent, but it ought not to be discounted. People need to realize that while it is obviously painful for parents to have lost a child, it is also painful for the sibling who has not only lost a brother or sister, but an irreplaceable friend.

While dealing with this double loss, he or she must confront another factor; the loss of a brother or sister is frequently the surviving sibling’s first experience with death of any young person. Young people feel they will live forever. A strong dose of mortality in the form of sibling death is very hard to take. The feelings of the sibling are often discounted when decisions are made – on things ranging from funeral plans to flower selections. Parents needs to listen to surviving siblings who usually know a lot about the taste and preferences of the deceased.

Drawing on the knowledge that surviving siblings have about supposedly trivial things – such as favorite clothes or music – can serve two purposes when planning a funeral or memorial service. First, their input helps ensure that the deceased received the type of service he or she would have liked. Second, their inclusion in the planning lets them know they are still an important part of the family.

I realize that people are unaware that they are discounting sibling grief. But then – that’s why I am writing this – so people will know.

Everyone

We Need Each Other

Many living things need each other to survive. If you have ever seen a Colorado Aspen tree, you may have noticed that it does not grow alone. Aspens are found in clusters, or groves. The reason is that the aspen sends up new shoots from the roots. In a small grove, all the trees may be connected by their roots.

Giant California Redwood trees may tower 300 feet into the sky. It would seem that they would require extremely deep roots to anchor them against strong winds. But we’re told their roots are quite shallow in order to capture as much surface water as possible. And they spread in all directions, intertwining with other redwoods. Locked together in this way, all trees support each other in wind and storms. Like the aspen, they never stand alone. They need each other to survive.

People too are connected by a system of roots. We are born to family and learn early to make friends. We are not meant to survive long without others. And like the redwood, we need to hold one another up. When pounded by the sometimes vicious storms of life, we need others to support and sustain us.

Have you been going it alone? Maybe it’s time to let someone else help hold you up for a while. Or perhaps, someone needs to hang on to you.

~ from the book RICHES OF THE HEART
by Steve Goodier

The Compassionate Friends Sibling Credo

*We are the surviving siblings of The Compassionate Friends
We are brought together by the deaths of our brothers and sisters*

Open your hearts to us, but have patience with us.

Sometimes we need our families to be there.

Sometimes we must walk alone, taking our memories with us, to become the individuals we want to be.

We cannot be our dead brother or sister; however a special part of them lives on with us.

When our brothers and sisters died, our lives changed.

We are living a life very different from what we envisioned and we feel a responsibility to be strong even when we feel weak.

Yet we can go on because we understand better than many the value of family and the precious gift of life.

Our goal is not to be the forgotten mourners that we are, but to walk together to face tomorrow as the surviving siblings of The Compassionate Friends.

Our Children Remembrances — Changes

A longstanding tradition in our Manhattan Chapter of Compassionate Friends newsletter has been the listing of our children’s and sibling’s birthdays and anniversaries. I know I look first at each issue of the newsletter to see my child’s listing, my sister’s listing, and scan for the birthdays and anniversaries of my TCF friends loved ones.

It is very important that our listings are correct and meaningful and we try to keep the listings as accurate and up to date as possible, but we are not perfect. Should you desire a change to your loved one’s listing or if your listing is missing, please let us know. Email to tcfmanhattan.nyc@gmail.com and tell us what needs to change.
